'The Heart of Children's Mercy' garners hospital's second trophy for programming excellence

Rand O'Donnell, PhD, President and CEO, and Jo Stueve, EVP/Chief Operating Officer, show off the second Emmy Award won by Children's Mercy for outstanding programming.

Once again, Inside Pediatrics has been recognized with a prestigious Emmy award for outstanding programming by the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

At the awards event Saturday night, the fifth episode (titled "The Heart of Children's Mercy") of the show's second season won for Best Public/Current/Community Affairs Program or Special.

The episode focused on the journeys of two of our young heart transplant patients. If you missed the show, you can still watch it here: <http://www.insidepediatrics.com/>

Sawyer Byrnes, one of the stars of "Inside Pediatrics, the Heart of Children's Mercy," which has earned the hospital its second Emmy Award.

"Many thanks to all the physicians, nurses and support staff who allowed us such open access to film," said Laurie Ellison, Chief Marketing Officer. "But most importantly, thanks to Sawyer's and Marissa's families for allowing us to share their journey with them. And a special thanks to Dr. O'Donnell and Jo Stueve who have consistently championed this program as a means to help educate and inspire our community about the great work that happens at Children's Mercy. Finally, a huge 'thank you' to the Communications & Marketing team who embraced this project - on top of all their other work - as a true labor of love."

This is the second Emmy award for Inside Pediatrics. Last year, Season 1 of Inside Pediatrics won an Emmy in the same category.
